Campo Grande is an old Portuguese parish (freguesia) of the municipality of Lisbon, with 10 514 inhabitants (2011). As a consequence of an administrative reorganization, made official on November 8th, 2012 and that came into force after the municipal elections of 2013, the parish was dissolved and almost all of its territory was integrated in a wider version of the parish of Alvalade, with only a very small parcel of land, next to the Segunda Circular, transferred to the neighboring parish of São Domingos de Benfica. It is in this old parish territory (Campo Grande) that is located Lisbon's University City (Cidade Universitária), the largest campus of higher education in the country, and the University of Lisbon. It was also the location of the siege of Lisbon by the King of Castile following the 1383-85 crisis.
